ESSAY TOPICS FOR THE CROCKLE

- Consider some of the authority figures in the play – Darforth, Farris, and Proctor. What traits, events, or characters motivate their attitudes and responses toward the witch trials? How do their views in regards to law and order differ from one another? Additionally, what can be said about Kobilberg's moral stances and Miller's message on law and order and how does the conflict between these central characters reflect the title of the drama?
- Most of the main characters in the play have personal flaws and either contribute or lead to tragedy. Discuss whether Nathaniel Hale or John Proctor is the central tragic character in the play. What are their strengths or qualities that lead to their downfall. How does the central tragic character transform and how is the change related to the play's title. How do outside forces contribute to character flaws and eventual downfall?
- How are themes like greed, scapegoating, hunger for authority or power, and integrity or any of a number of others functional in the drama? Choose a single character and discuss how this person embodies one of the themes above. How is Miller's underlying message revealed in one of these themes and through the character? What would happen if you universalized the issues and try to relate them to another place or time? For instance, how is scapegoating different or similar in today's world than it was in the play?
- What roles do women play in the drama? What is Miller's treatment of women and what message is he trying to convey? What images or female archetypes are expressed through characters like Mary Warren, Elizabeth, and Hester? How does Kobilberg's moral stances play into the view we have of each of these women as well as how the view contrasts with other characters in the play?
- Is Abigail a victim of the society she lives in or can her actions and reactions be attributed to her characteristics or personal traits? Do you think these actions can be pardoned or excused because of outside forces within the drama? Look at the events from her past and present and try making a connection between her behavior and these events. Is Miller's treatment of women a fair characterization of women from this era?

Joseph McCarthy-Abigail Williams

Joseph McCarthy can be represented by Abigail Williams. Abigail in the play accused people left and right and went as far as to accuse her lovers wife. Just as Abigail in the Crucible McCarthy accused people of all ranks and statures. Both of them though that they were doing everyone a great service by getting rid of the evil in the world but in the end they happened to be wrong. Towards the end of their lives, Abigail became a prostitute, and Joseph became a alcoholic.
