I truly believe I am the luckiest man alive. Peter Lawrence has finally agreed to marry me and Juliet later today. Rosaline is my heart's old desire, but my heart gave her Juliet. She still looks the torches to burn brighter with her exquisite beauty. I have been wondering until now believing my heart belonged to Rosaline. "Is love a tender thing?" Loving her felt like a "master of love", true her beauty attracted me, but my unconditional love towards her saved my soul. I longed to be with her, but she wanted to marry Claudio, causing me great amounts of pain that "broke the frame". I could not forget about Rosaline, she was constantly in my thoughts, but I was justified to ever think she could love me. I now realize my feelings for her were false and that I lost myself because I was in love with her because I wanted that love returned.

Rosaline wanted me to forget Rosaline and suggested we attended the Capulet's feast, of which I have no greater enemy. He thought we could go with "unadvised eyes" and compare her with the other women of Verona for it would be no more than "to win a crown". I trusted my heart's good judgment, but agreed to attend the feast alongside Rosaline, if only to prove the saying. Therefore I was pleased that we would go to the feast in masks and carrying torches so that we would not be recognized by our foes. If the Capulets had discovered me, a Montague amongst their own family I would have been killed.

When we eventually arrived at the feast Rosaline immediately wanted to dance, but a dream I had, revisited me warning me of the events that were to happen should I attend the feast. An "unlucky death" was to occur to someone close to my heart, not an intended death, one in the "stars". By the looks that spread across Rosaline and Mercutio's faces it was obvious they did not believe a word I had just said. Something dreadful was going to happen and I was not aware when or how I could prevent it.

As the evening grew later I went for a "walk A bout", noticing for the first time someone, whose beauty was far more exquisite than Rosaline's. I knew not her name, but was enraptured by her beauty, completely forgetting my surroundings and the people I was amongst. She stood out like a "wren" dove trooping with "crows", her beauty enraptured me in a trance. I felt so stupid to think I had ever really been in love with Rosaline and as I watched this stunning woman dancing in front of me I slowly grew out of love with Rosaline.
